

Civil, Architectural, and Environmental Engineering at Missouri S&T invites applications for a tenure-track position at the assistant professor level in the area of Environmental Engineering.

Applicants must hold an earned Ph.D. in environmental engineering or a closely related discipline and demonstrate the ability and desire to teach environmental engineering courses at the graduate and undergraduate levels. The department offers ABET-accredited bachelor's degree programs, as well as master's and Ph.D. programs.

The successful candidate will be expected to supervise graduate students and will have the opportunity to collaborate with members of various campus research centers and signature areas, notably the Center for Research in Energy and Environment (CREE.mst.edu/) and the Materials Research Center (MRC.mst.edu).

Applicants should demonstrate potential for high-quality research in any area of scholarship in Environmental Engineering; areas complementing existing strengths and therefore of particular interest are sustainable systems and processes, biological processes, or environmental microbiology. The capacity to teach at the graduate level in one of these areas is particularly welcome.

Missouri S&T's CAEE Department, with 19 tenured/tenure-track faculty and 25 total faculty, positively impacts society through ground-breaking research and high-quality graduate and undergraduate education spanning a legacy of over 150 years.
